Who we are:

The CSS Pre-Law Program adheres to the values of humility, empathy, service, and justice. This is a pre-professional program where the students serve one another and the community. All CSS students are eligible to become a part of the program – the program does not recommend classes, nor does it have a preference of majors or minors. Only students who regularly volunteer and participate are considered full members of the program.

What we do:

The CSS Pre-Law Advisor offers guidance and instructions to students interested in a variety of legal/justice related fields. For example: preparation and application to law schools, preparation for paralegal careers, exploration of opportunities in other legal and justice related fields such as law enforcement, public policy, advocacy, and NGO/non-profit.

The program hosts regularly scheduled discussion sessions with alumni and community leaders. We have hosted the St. Louis county attorney, a public defender, a forensics psychologist, a municipal judge, and law school admissions counselors. The advisor has also led delegations of CSS students to attend regional law fairs.

Participating in the program does not commit you to law school, nor to any particular path after CSS. Successful completion of your participation will clarify the advantages and disadvantages of different professional paths, while imparting critical information on the professional knowledge and attitude necessary to prepare you for your postgraduate career.

What you should do:

You should e-mail Professor Liang (hliang@css.edu) to indicate your interest. You will be added to the program’s email-list. You should also join the program’s Facebook page at https://www.facebook.com/pages/The-College-of-St-Scholastica-Pre-Law-Program/144100095661658.

Most important, you should participate and volunteer.
